Examination Overview

Learning Objectives

On completion of the course, the student should be able to:

- account for climate variations over time, key climate science concepts and the most important conclusions of different research areas;
- account for climate change and leadership from an environmental history perspective;
- summarise and critically relate to different perspectives, central theories and concepts regarding climate change and leadership;
- account for and problematise current issues, research and scientific debates within the climate change leadership field;
- describe climate change and leadership from a justice, power and gender perspective;
- identify, analyse and critically relate to power relations, ethical dilemmas and conflicts which may occur in the work within the field;
- use various communicative strategies and methods regarding climate change and leadership;
- design a practical specialisation within the climate change leadership field;
- apply relevant methods and lead a work in the climate leadership field;
- author an interdisciplinary text within the climate change leadership field;
- in an interdisciplinary and popular scientific manner communicate the results of work within the climate change leadership field.

As per the course syllabus you will be examined through written preparation for (3 credits) and active participation in seminars and workshops (2 credits), continuous report back (5 credits), and finally through written documentation (18 credits) and oral presentation (2 credits) of engagement in a larger project (leadership work).

All examinations must be completed in order to pass the course and have been designed to assist your learning. Further detailed instructions on examination components will be distributed during the course. This course is graded (F,3,4,5). Whilst all examination components must be completed, the final course grade will be determined by the grade of the interdisciplinary text as part of the written documentation of the leadership work.

The different components are overviewed below, alongside the relevant due dates. A schedule overview is also included at the bottom of the document.
